He showed me the various paintings in his office, and described in simple terms the techniques of the artists.

I was impressed by the clarity of his thought and expression. There was none of the fumbling so often apparent in reading the transcripts of his press conferences.

I returned to the Department and went to the tripartite Foreign Ministers' session. Everything proceeded amiably, although the desire of the Italians to attend the meeting, now set for May 11 as a result of the Soviets' acceptance yesterday, raised difficulties.

The U. S., U. K., French and German Foreign Ministers convened after the conclusion of the meeting of the three. This time there was a more lively discussion. Von Brentano raised serious objections to the Working Group papers on reunification. There were also
